WHOLE CITY SHAKEN.

Families, Thrown from Bed Rushed in Panic to Street in Night Clothing.

Theo men were fatally injured and scores bruised and out by an avalanche of rock that, set loose by a torrido blast in the Pennsylvania tunnel, at Long Island City, buried the defenseless workmen at the bottom of the shaft at Borden and East avenues. The fatally injured men are: Frank Flanagan, twenty-eight years old, of No. 542 Lockwood street; skull fractured. Edward Kirnin, twenty-five years old, of One Hundred and Fifty-eighth street, ribs broken and internal injuries. James Lyons, twenty-two years old. No. 61 Vernon avenue, internal injur-

a little after 5 o'clock, threw people from their bods and smashed dozens of windows in the neighborhood. There was a panic among the occupants of the near-by houses. They rushed out of their homes in scanty clothing, fearing from bitter experience that their dwellings were again tumbling to the ground. Rocked Railroad Station.

The blast, which was set off at the end of the tunnel, about 1,600 feet from the shaft at Borden and East avenues, was one of the most powerful that have been set off since the contractors began work. It exploded almost under the station of the Long Island Railroad and the structure was shaken to its foundations by the force.

The gang that was caught in the fall of rock were hard at work at the bottom of the shaft. It is about sixty feet of rock were hard at work at the bottom of the shaft. It is about sixty feet deep, and the men were putting up the fron siding. They were working on a platform. They had no warning of the boom and a quaking of the earth that nearly threw them from the platform. Then followed a rush of air. The next second there was a roar from above, and tons of the rock that forms the sides of the shaft came crashing down upon them. There was a great cry of fear as the men jumped for safety. But they were too late and scores of them were caught under the masses of rock. The plat-form was smashed down. Only the cries form was smashed down. Only the cries of the injured could be heard through the muffling clouds of dust that hid everything. Other workmen hurried to the rescue and regardless of the fragments that still menaced above strove to get their comrades from the ruins. Ambulances were hurriedly called and by the time the surgeons arrived the men had been taken out. They were carried to the top of the shaft, where they received stimulants and treatment. The three worst injured were taken to the hospital.

The Inspector has inaugurated a policy of arresting known thieves on sight and taking them to Headquarters. New York is overflowing with pickpockets and new ones are drifting in every day.

A new field of activity for the pickpocket is the retiring room of the theatres. At the close of an act, when half the men in the house get up and rush for the door, either to smoke a cigarette or see a man outside, the pickpocket gets busy. They work in teams, one a big, strong fellow, to do the roughing or "stalling," the other to exercise his nimble fingers in the pursust of valuables.

Kingsley L. Martin, the engineer in charge of the Brooklyn and Williamsburg bridges, has a scheme by which a terminal at the Williamsburg Bridge will not be necessary and also that passengers may be carried without a change of cars from Coney Island to Yonkers. In other words he suggests the equipment of all cars of the B. R. T. as well as the Metropolitan with the overhead trolley pole and the underground plough, which runs in the slot.

The scheme was made public in a letter that Engineer Martin forwarded to day to Bridge Commissioner Stevenson. Investigation made later showed that already the Metropolitan system was at work upon its cars, making the necessary changes. No one believes for a moment that an engineer of Mr. Martin's standing would make the suggestion unless he was satisfied that the Bridge of the product of the passengers was a hurse bunch of lilles of the valley.
